who was going to the assembly, but such orders have been few. American Beauty roses alone, or roses and orchids made up in a bouquet, are in better laste. Frequently a bride will carry lilies of the valley and often an orchid is put in the bouquet for a color contrast. But, as I said before, for all purposes where the absolutely correct is almed at one can't go wrong in selecting the American Beauty rose.

"This is going to be a tremendous year for flowers," he continued. "No one knows why this is so, but individual orders booked with other florists and myself are more numerous now than ever before, and by far a greater quantity of flowers is wanted. Certain decorations last year called for twenty dozens of roses. This year we are told to make it forty dozens.

"A fact not to be overlocked is the rapid tise of the violet in popular favor. Year before last the violet begon to make its influence felt. Last year there were three times as many violets entitivated and soid as there were in the year preceding—and this year here will be twice as many soid as last year. But this does not mean that the violet will be the fashionable flower, it is growing to be the popular one, but its the violet will be the fashionable flower. It is growing to be the popular one, but its uses are circumscribed—it will never be accepted as the correct thing for evening, because it is not an avening flower.

"The men's flower of ultra occasions is the Gardenia. It is a white, flaxen-leaved flower, with heavy, olive-green leaves. New Yorkers have worn it for quite a long time, while the Londoner would not think of wearing any other flower in his button-hole at a swagger affair. The Gardenia fades quickly, breaks easily and costs 50 cents apiece.

"At many of the early fall weddings the color scheme of the flower decorations has been yellow a fact that has induced many people to think that yellow will be the fach-tonable color this season. But it is much too soon to prophesy, as the zenson is not yet in full swing, and because the enry-antihemum hasn't brought its rumpled head to market to arbitrate on the question."

BOAS ARE NECESSARY.

If You Would Be Stylish, Muffle Your Neck.

Fashlon decrees that every woman shall have a boa this winter. This does not mean that the boa must be of fur, although fur boas, bedecked with many tails, will be popular. But the ruffs of silk, chenilis and feathers will be most conspicuous. Chenilie is par excellence the decorative feature of the winter. It is used in every possible combination, and will add richness to tailets for house and street.

sible combination, and will add richness to tellets for house and street.

Some of the new boas are made entirely of chenille, short loops being used to form the ruffle around the neck and extremely long ones for the finish in front. More frequently, however, the chenille is used to trim boas made of silk or other delicate materials. It is even combined with feathers as a novelty.

trim boas made of silk or other delicate materials. It is even combined with feathers as a novelity.

The ostrich feather boas are by no means out of date, but they have been replaced to a great extent by the more fanciful and novel effects introduced this season. Aside from black, the light colors, frequently shaded in delicate tones of pink, blue and gray, are most to evidence. Fancy feathers of all kinds will be used for neck garnitures, loosely made up to secure the light fluffy effect so much desired.

Ribbon is used much as chenille is, with short loops for the collar and long ones for the front finish. Sometimes only one color is used, but more frequently there is a combination of two or even three. Black and white are used together in this and in other materials. All tones of gray, brown and frequently more striking colors are to be seen in elaborate designs.

In the majority of cases the color simply encircles the neck and is finished with an elaborate garniture failing over the bodice, often to the knees.

Mousseline de soie, tulle, chiffon and all such sheer materials in light shades, often brightened with gold embroidery, are shown for evening wear and add a certain sumptuousness to the tollet.

New Feather Boas.

There is an entirely new departure in feather boas. The new boa is a sort of mixed affair, like all fashionable furs and neck trimmings this year. The upper section is made of the orthodox ostricil feathers, but this only reaches about to the bust, and from there down the boa is subdivided into a mass of tails of irregular length. These are made of short pin feathers from the breast or stomach of the bird

SLIPPING OF A BOG IN IRELAND.

Diving into the old records of one of the It Bore Down Upon a House and Killed Two Women.

> An extraordinary occurrence is reported from a place called Lough, in Ireland. A beg extending over a number of acres, yielding to the effects of recent heavy rains, began to move toward an adjacent valley. The semifluid mass gathered va-locity as it moved along, spread over an intervening low-lying portion of land, and locity as it moved along, spread over an intervening low-lying portion of land, and completely overwheimed a dwelling-house, killing two women.

A considerable loss of outlying crops was caused, and the land over which the bog material passed will, it is said, be quite useless for a considerable time. At present a mass of liquid mud lee feet wide and 4 feet deep covers the public highway for more than a mile.

A second movement of the bog mass has since occurred, and the residents in the district fear that, should there be a heavy rainfall, the consequences will be disastrous, as five dwelling-houses in the valley are directly in the line of an enormeus mass of bog mud, which has been stopped by not too strong banks on the upper levels.

At the inquest over the bodies of the two wemen the son of one of them testified that he saw the moving mass sweeping down on the house, and had barely time to escape from the field in which he was working. A brother of the other woman said it came silently on like a huge wave, He shouted to his sister, who was standing in the door, but she did not seem to realize the danger. He was caught in the edge of the flow, but succeeded in extricating himself.

LOST HIS GRIP.

Telegraph Operators Who Cannot Control Their Fingers.

Control Their Fingers.

"I have lost my grip."

This phrase is applied by men to sil kinds of failures. One of the technical usages of losing one's grip is in the case of telegraph operators, says an exchange.

Many of the most skilled operators suffer at times from a loss of "grip," and are compelled to give way temporarily to a substitute. This "grip" is the hold on the key, and the moment the operator begins to lose the control of this "grip" he realizes a rest, although for only a brief time, is due him.

Another, but unpleasant, term applied to this loss of "grip" is "telegraphers' paralysis," it shows itself in many curious ways, all showing that the muscles brought into play in working the key are badly worn.

One of the most skillful operators in Louisville, who is subject to these attacks, cannot send "P." The Morse manual calls for five dots for this letter. The operator in question has, by some hook or crook lost the power to stop at the fifth dot, and it is a common thing for him to warn the taker to look out for his "P.".

Recently he asked a fellow-operator to watch him send "Ps," and to stop him at the end of the fifth dot. It resulted that, although he would be warned at the fourth dot, the fingers, no longer mastered by the brain, would continue dotting beyond the fifth.
